STUMP MERRILL

Y A N K E E S M A N A G E R

It would be difficult to convince even the most die-hard Yankees fans that the 1991 team has a shot at the brass ring. On the other hand, it is almost equally as tough to have a conversation with Manager Carl "Stump" Merrill and not feel like the Yankees can be contenders this season.

"I've been excited for months," Merrill said just before spring training. "I know we're obviously not going to be the odds-on favorite, but I really think we can surprise some people."

A positive approach is perhaps the best way to describe the stocky Yankee skipper.

"Everything we deal with will be in positives," says Merrill. "We're going to block out all of the negatives and deal with everything in a positive way."

MERRILL

How can Merrill, whose team finished last a year ago, remain upbeat? Partly because he is optimistic by nature. But also, think of the excitement that anyone has after a new job or promotion. That feeling was magnified several times over for Merrill, who spent 14 years as a highly successful manager in the Yankees minor league system before getting his chance in the majors.

And now that he's arrived, Merrill also knows that it takes more than a bright outlook to win games. Make no mistake, his positive demeanor is not to be confused with a lack of perspective. Merrill is a no-nonsense type of guy who combines a positive attitude with a hard-nosed approach to this game.

"It's obvious that we haven't been good enough, and that we need to improve," says Merrill. "We're coming at it with the idea that each day we will be better than the day before." ♦

MIKE FERRARO

MARK CONNOR

BUCK SHOWALTER

YANKEE COACHING STAFF

There is nothing different about the fact that Mike Ferraro is a coach on the Yankees staff. After all, 1991 does mark his 22nd season with the organization. Still there is a subtle difference about his role this season.

Ferraro moves from his usual first base coaching box to the role of bench coach. The move is a bit of a promotion for this long-time baseball man, as the all-important bench coach serves as an assistant to the manager.

With Stump Merrill in his first full season as a major league manager, he couldn't find a better bench coach than Ferraro. Ferraro has played for the Yankees, was a manager in their farm system for five years, has been a big league manager for two seasons and a coach for another 10. That's why, while coaches come and go, Mike Ferraro remains a Yankee constant.

The job may be the same, but the challenges are different every year for Yankees pitching coach Mark Connor. It seems like whenever there is a pitching problem, Connor is the man the Yankees turn to.

"He's done this here before," says General Manager Gene Michael. "Stump has a lot of confidence in Mark and so do I."

For more than a decade Connor has gone wherever he's been needed the most. While other so-called pitching experts have come and gone, Connor has been with the organization for every season since 1980 except for 1988-89. Over that period he has served as pitching coach at every level of the organization, including two prior stints with New York as pitching coach and last year as the team's bullpen coach.

This year he again takes over all of the pitching duties. For the quiet and confident Mark Connor, same job, different day.

Third base coach Buck Showalter is young, he's good and he can help his manager in a lot of different ways. In five years as a manager in the Yankee farm system Showalter's teams finished first four times, winning three championships along the way. His reputed knowledge of the game's tactical aspect earned him a shot as an eye-in-the-sky coach last year, and has many touting him as a future big league skipper.

Still, at age 34, he is young and unassuming. In fact, Showalter downplays his role on the staff, always looking to give credit to others. With 1990 being his first year as a coach in the big leagues he defers to the experience of the rest of the staff.

"These guys have been around for a long time and are very experienced," says Showalter. "I try to feed off their knowledge while I learn the league, and try to help whenever I can."

FRANK HOWARD

When his name was announced at the 1989 Old Timers game at Yankee Stadium, big Frank Howard emerged from the visiting dug-out wielding a monstrous five-foot replica baseball bat. While it was meant to be a joke, the novelty looked almost real in the hands of the 6-8, 300-pound Howard.

The organization is hoping that the former Washington Senator-turned-Yankee hitting coach can help the current Bombers to also carry a big stick. Howard served as the Yankees hitting coach in 1989, but not in 1990. Several Yankee players had "career years" at the plate in 1989, but had off years in 1990. The front office isn't chancing that it might have been a coincidence.

"A coach can't make all the difference, but we feel that Frank Howard can really help our hitters," said General Manager Gene Michael. "He's a tremendous instructor, and the players really like him."

GRAIG NETTLES

Graig Nettles. 1978 World Series. Say no more. The year highlighted by the Bucky Dent home run and the pitching of Ron Guidry, was salvaged in the World Series by the defensive heroics of Nettles at third base.

In reflecting on the four diving plays that led to the Yankees winning Game Three and eventually the World Series, Nettles talks of being prepared. By envisioning the most difficult play possible before each pitch, Nettles was ready when it occurred on the field.

"Graig was gritty, determined and, most of all, an intelligent player," says General Manager Gene Michael. "We see him as being a real solid influence on the team."

Nettles, who returns to New York as first base coach, became a fan favorite because of his get-dirty defensive style and his left-handed home run power. By instilling that same style and quality into the '91 team, Nettles just might salvage more Yankee victories.

MARC HILL

Persistence and dedication. Just two reasons why Marc Hill is Stump Merrill's bullpen coach. After a 14-year playing career ended in 1986, Hill spent the next year as a manager in the Chicago White Sox minor league system, and 1988 as a coach with the Houston Astros. Then in 1989 this former big league backstop became the Yankee farm system's roving catching instructor.

He spent the 1990 season as the Yankees' bullpen coach where he was noticed by Merrill, who took over as manager in June of that season.

Recognizing the skill and determination of this young man, Merrill made him a full-time coach in charge of the bullpen. Despite his youthful appearance, and his nickname of "Booter," the 39-year-old Hill shouldn't be taken lightly.

With a similar background as Jeff Torborg, a highly successful Yankee bullpen coach turned AL Manager of the Year in 1990, the Yankees feel the bullpen duties are in capable hands with Marc Hill.

WELCOME TO YANKEE STADIUM

Yankees

The New York Yankees Stadium Operations Personnel would like to take this opportunity to thank you for your patronage. Our goal is to provide all fans with a safe, comfortable and clean environment in which they may thoroughly enjoy a ball game. In striving to achieve this goal, we would ask that you please take the time to read through the following information so that you may responsibly play your part in continuing the great tradition of Yankee Stadium as one of the best facilities in Major League Baseball.

BOTTLES AND CANS

New York City ordinance prohibits fans from bringing cans, bottles (glass or plastic), jugs, or hard containers of any kind into the stadium. This is a safety measure to protect fans as well as team and stadium personnel. If these items are found to be in your possession prior to entering the stadium, Yankee Security Personnel will ask you to dispose of the item(s) to your car. Once you enter the stadium, canned or bottled goods will be confiscated and disposed of, and coolers, jugs, etc. will be checked at the gate to be picked up as you leave the stadium.

BANNERS AND SIGNS

Banners and signs are welcome in Yankee Stadium as long as they are in good taste as determined by stadium management personnel. The following rules apply to the display of these items:

1. They may not be hung in fair territory or on any part of the playing field.
2. They may not be hung in any way so as to obstruct the view of fans or any stadium signage.
3. They may only be held up in, or paraded through, the general seating areas between innings.

4. The use of weights of any kind to keep a banner or sign in place is strictly prohibited.

NOTE: If any banner or sign interferes with the sight lines of the players, the umpires may request its removal.

Our security personnel are trained to handle situations involving violation of these rules and regulations. We ask that you report such violators to the nearest security officer so that the appropriate action may be taken. The doctrine of anonymity will be observed.

As a player in the Yankees minor league system, Roberto Kelly branded talents worth keeping an eye on.

There was the speed on the bases, the skill at the plate, and deftness in the outfield.

The 26-year-old Panamanian enjoyed his finest season as a pro in 1990. Kelly was durable; he played in 162 games joining Roy White as the only Yankee outfielder to ever accomplish the feat. Kelly was productive; he finished the season hitting .285 with 15 home runs and 61 RBI. He stole 42 bases, third in the American League, including a theft of home plate versus the Toronto Blue Jays.

In the outfield, Kelly ranked 12th in the league with a .988 fielding percentage and finished the season with 39 straight errorless games.

Look for this burgeoning star to once again be the center of attention in 1991.

When the Yankees traded for catcher Matt Nokes, everyone was well aware of his offensive capabilities. So it was no surprise when Nokes put up impressive offensive numbers as a lethal pinch-hitter and one of the team's best clutch hitters.

"The Yankees have gotten too right-handed in a park where you need left-handers to win," says General Manager Gene Michael. "Getting Matt Nokes, with his proven left-handed power, gave us that needed strength against righty pitching."

What the Yankees received as a bonus were defensive skills that far exceeded Nokes' reputation. Sometimes regarded as a weak defensive catcher, Nokes has proven his critics wrong. He's healthy and thanks to a stint in the off-season instructional league, he's steadily improved his defense. Now Matt Nokes is determined to help the Yankees both behind and in front of the plate.

Much has been expected of Hensley "Bam-Bam" Meulens and much has been said about him. The strapping young man from the Netherlands Antilles feels he's ready to put his outstanding five-year minor league career behind him and embark on his next goal--to be the everyday leftfielder for the New York Yankees. The former third baseman is exactly the kind of player the Yankees can build around in the '90s.

"I'm excited about what could happen this season," says the 1990 International League Player of the Year. "I think the main thing I have now is confidence. I know I belong here. I don't want to go back to Triple-A."

Manager Stump Merrill can see that Meulens is ripe for the majors: "He's made the adjustment to the outfield and he's matured a great deal. I think he's ready to come of age."

Numbers can play a deceiving role in the life of a pitcher. Just ask left-hander Chuck Cary. Despite an overall record of 6-12 last season, the 31-year-old lefty displayed an ability to dominate a ballgame.

Bothered by bone chips in his left elbow, Cary was placed on the disabled list from April 9 to the middle of May last season. He returned to the rotation and displayed a fastball that still had plenty of pop in it. His three-to-one strikeout-to-walk ratio at Yankee Stadium was clear evidence that his arm was once again strong.

As a southpaw, Cary's presence in a right-handed dominated rotation will be invaluable. Combining a major league fastball and slider with a nasty screwball, the third-year Yankee has all the tools to come up big in 1991.

The biggest symbol of the Yankees' poor 1990 season was the "disappearance" of Don Mattingly. A severe back injury sidelined the six-time All-Star first baseman for one-third of the season and drastically reduced his statistics to career lows.

It was a devastating blow to the organization and its fans, but it was later softened by Mattingly's ambitious and optimistic return last September when he hit a customary .333 for the month. He seemed to be stroking the ball like the Don of old.

Again in 1991, the Yankees look to Mattingly as their beacon of hope. In his ninth season in Pinstripes, the former AL MVP has been named only the 10th team captain in Yankee history. Don is now the true leader of the club and he has plans to turn his game around. He enjoyed a healthy and productive off-season working out at home and he's maintaining a regular back exercise program during the season. Certain critics wonder if Mattingly will ever approach his home run and RBI numbers of past years, but one should never discount a physically sound Don Mattingly. Still a young man, he has a lot of baseball left to play.

"I never believed people who said what I can't do. I go out and do it," Mattingly says. "I'll try and do most of my talking with my bat again."

It would be nice to tell Scott Sanderson to just go out and pitch. To have fun out there, and not to worry. Say what you want, but no matter how you slice it, there is still a lot of pressure riding on his right arm. He comes to the Yankees in a trade with Oakland after winning 17 games in 1990. Sanderson will be expected to deliver similarly in New York on a team with less offensive flair than the A's. He comes to a team in need of consistent starting pitching and in search of an ace. And he must prove that regardless of the team, he can provide plenty of quality innings.

"Scotty can pitch," says General Manager Gene Michael. "Last year he was healthy for the first time in a long time, and the results were evident. He can pitch."

The Yankees' rise from last place lies heavily on the health and ability of Scott Sanderson. No pressure.

It's a funny thing about comparisons. Almost everyone agrees how unfair it is to compare a young player with a former one, but yet it's done all the time. Take the case of lefty slugger Kevin Maas. After he became the fastest player in baseball history to hit 10 homers (79 ABs) and 15 homers (134 ABs) people started comparing him to Babe Ruth. Talk about unfair. How about having to fill the Babe's shoes?

"I've seen most of the great Yankee hitters," says coach Mike Ferraro, "and this kid has a chance to be one of them."

Maas does have a Ruthian-like swing, well-suited to Yankee Stadium. His quick and explosive bat evokes images of former Yankee power hitters who ignited droves of fans in years past.

So what if comparisons aren't fair. They sure are fun. Almost as much fun as watching Kevin Maas swing the bat.

Y oungster Jim Leyritz gives new meaning to the terms "player development" and "home-grown prospect." Signed by the Yankees in 1986, Leyritz has steadily moved up through the organizational ladder. He hit .363 at Class-A Oneonta in 1986, .307 at Ft. Lauderdale in 1987 and .315 in 1989 during his second year at Double-A Albany. After a short stint in Columbus last year, Leyritz moved up to the big leagues where he got an RBI-single in his first major-league at-bat. He went on to hit .343 through his first 20 games.

"Jim has been successful because he gives himself a chance to hit," says Manager Stump Merrill. "He swings at strikes, and is very selective."

He's cocky and confident. He can hit for average, and can play third base, catcher and the outfield. His versatile skills will again make him a valued Yankee in 1991.

The Yankees have been fortunate enough to feature some of baseball's best outfielders over the years and Jesse Barfield has taken his place alongside those names. He possesses the grace, the smarts, the speed and the strength that is required of the outfielding elite. His defense, especially his howitzer arm, can win games alone as exhibited by his leading the majors with 16 assists in 1990. It was the second time he's been atop that list in the last three seasons and is now ranked third among active players in career assists.

At the plate, Barfield's 25 home runs and 78 RBI led the Yankees in '90. Jesse's all-around contributions can certainly help the club return to contender status in 1991 and he's well aware of what both aspects of his game can accomplish. "Offense brings them," he says of Yankee fans, "and defense sends them home happy."

On first appearance, Steve Farr, a fireplug of a pitcher, elicits an attitude most pitchers would find quite helpful. The right-hander can be downright intimidating, and his fierce, competitive nature has become legendary.

Selected by the Kansas City Royals as their pitcher of the year last season, Farr, also known as "The Beast," works as either reliever or starter.

In addition to his career-high 13 wins in 1990, the 34-year-old worked 127 innings while collecting a miniscule 1.98 ERA. Farr is not concerned with being labeled a starter or reliever, he just wants the ball regardless of the circumstances.

"I like to do a little bit of everything," Farr says. "I like getting saves or being out there when the game is on the line."

In his rather unorthodox batting stroke, Mel Hall has found a swing quite appealing to the Yankee Stadium dimensions.

In two seasons with the Yankees, Hall has slammed 29 home runs and collected 104 RBI in limited playing time. His aggressive play in the outfield has produced several memorable catches.

A fine all-around athlete, this 30-year-old left-hander will see time as a designated hitter and as a fourth outfielder. His explosive bat and skill with the glove make him invaluable coming off the bench in key situations. Last season he produced when asked and is looking forward to another season.

"This is where I want to play," Hall says. "The fans respect me and I respect them. It's the place for me to play. This park was tailor-made for me."

From his third base position, Mike Blowers throws across the diamond with velocity few major leaguers can match. At the plate, he can hit a ball beyond any fence at any ballpark. Putting the two together on a consistent basis is the goal for the 26-year-old infielder.

Acquired from the Montreal Expos in 1989, Blowers has the ability and opportunity to play the hot corner for the Yankees for many years to come.

Splitting time between New York and Columbus in 1990 gave the second-year Yankee ample chance to hone his skills and take advantage of playing time. Last season with the Triple-A Columbus Clippers, Blowers hit .339, smacked six home runs and collected 50 RBI in 62 games. Certainly numbers that would make any manager smile.

"I'm confident at this level," says Blowers, "but I know mistakes will come. It's going to take time so I won't put undue pressure on myself. I just have to learn what it's like to be a big league player over a whole season."

For a guy who only had three starts in 1990, Pascual Perez sure has people anticipating a lot of excitement. That tells you something about his talent. Surgery on the shoulder that kept Perez out of the rotation for most of last season will delay his start in 1991. The Yankees hope that for a number of reasons it's a short delay.

On the mound this right-hander from the Dominican Republic was spectacular in his three starts before his injury in 1990. And let's not forget the entertainment value—especially in New York—of a guy who has a pickoff move between his legs. But considering his pitching skills and his flare on the mound, it's no wonder why everyone is anxiously awaiting the return of Pascual Perez.

Infielder Randy Velarde is in a catch-22. By proving he can be ready when he is needed, Velarde has earned himself a spot with the Yankees in a backup role. At the same time, he wants to play every day. At age 28, moving closer to becoming a utility infielder, Velarde must step to the front if he wants to become the team's regular third baseman.

The Yankees have talked about filling that position by trading for a left-handed hitter or by letting Velarde and Mike Blowers vie for the position.

"The only thing I can do is to play my game and make their decision a tough one," says Velarde, who's been there before. In 1988 he was recalled from Columbus five different times. In August 1989 he suffered a rib cage injury just when he seemed ready to become a starter. And last year no one permanently seized the Yankees' third base job. If he wants to become a starter, the time is now for Randy Velarde.

Had he arrived a year or two earlier, Tim Leary just might have put up the big pitching numbers the Yankees were looking for. Instead, frustrated by a lack of run support in 1990, Leary struggled through a disappointing 9-19 season.

However, numbers can be deceiving. Despite the record, most baseball people recognized the quality of Leary's performance. A number of rival clubs even approached the Yankees about trading for Leary whose effort did not go unnoticed. His big problem last year was the fact that the Yankees scored an average of less than two runs a game in his 19 losses. "When I go to the mound, my goal is to give my team a chance to win," says Leary. "For the most part, I feel I can accomplish that goal." So do the Yankees, who gave Leary a raise this winter. And, with a little help from his friends, Tim Leary is looking to return the favor by raising his record this year.

There are a number of ways to refer to Andy Hawkins' temperament. Even-keeled, a real poker face, focus on the positives. Take 1988 for example, when the free agent was signed by the Yankees and dubbed the "Anchor" of a staff badly in need of starting pitching. Hawkins didn't flinch even though his quiet and soft-spoken demeanor greatly contrasted with the New York spotlight.

It was more of the same on July 1, 1990 when he threw a no-hitter, only to lose 4-0 behind three errors. The truth is Hawkins has had a number of quality starts for the Yankees lost because of a lack of run support. Yet he never complains or blames his teammates. He comes to the park every day and gives his all. This year, now that he's not expected to carry this club, Andy Hawkins just wants to continue to work hard and be a consistent winner. "I know that I've been inconsistent," says Hawkins, "but I'm working very hard to get it back."

Yankee pitcher Alan Mills turned more than a few heads when he made the jump from Class-A ball to New York's Opening Day roster last season.

Only 24, the soft-spoken right-hander with a lively arm seems destined to go only one place, and that's up.

Mills' indoctrination to the majors was at times a rough one as his 1-5 record would indicate. But the experience he gained from his time in Pinstripes will be invaluable in the future.

Not one to search for the spotlight, the second-year Yankee will let his fastball do the talking for him.

Used primarily in relief, Mills appears to have all the attributes to be a winner on the mound. He was drafted by the California Angels, joined the Yankees organization in 1987 and has not looked back. The 1990 James P. Dawson Award winner as the outstanding Yankee rookie in spring training certainly has a lot to look forward to.

The Yankees' bullpen might be best known for its versatility and Greg Cadaret might best symbolize that all-around ability. Cadaret has demonstrated that he can pitch well in long relief, short relief, as a closer and even as a starter.

"Every staff needs that type of pitcher, someone who can fill a number of roles," says pitching coach Mark Connor. "Greg has been a savior for us at times, by coming in and doing the job wherever and whenever he's been needed."

In an era where the game has become highly specialized, Cadaret's main concern is throwing as often as possible. Quiet with the media, yet known by his teammates as the bullpen chatterbox, fireballer Greg Cadaret is making loud noises on the mound for the Yankees.

By now Yankee fans know all about the heart and desire of Yankee second baseman Steve Sax. His two years in Pinstripes have been full of enthusiasm and work. He is a special entity in today's game, never quitting and never losing sight of the task at hand. Although he was the Yankees' lone All-Star in 1990, Sax will be the first to admit he had an off-year. His average dipped to .260 and he fell a good deal short of the 205 hit total he posted in 1989.

Still, Sax was among the league leaders in stolen bases as he stole 43 to lead the Yankees. His defense was stellar and his attitude was refreshing.

"Sometimes last year I had a tendency to try too hard, to try to hit a three-run double with nobody on base," says Sax, a player who is ready to experience a winning atmosphere again. "I just try to keep focused every day, knowing the future is going to be better."

As hulking Detroit Tigers slugger Cecil Fielder deposited his 50th homer of the 1990 season into the Yankee Stadium seats last October, Yankees left-hander Steve Adkins could only watch. He knew his name would be a footnote in Detroit Tigers history as the pitcher of record. But that one pitch could not dampen a fine season.

The 26-year-old spent most of last season with the Columbus Clippers, the Yankees' Triple-A team. He compiled a 15-7 record including six complete games and two shutouts before being summoned to New York on September 9.

Later in the month, Adkins won his first major league game with a splendid four-hitter against the Milwaukee Brewers.

The Yankees' Minor League Pitcher of the Year in 1989 is working on controlling his knuckle-curveball which can be lethal when he throws it for strikes. Major League batters hit just .250 off the lefty in his five outings.

Adkins will chalk up 1990 as a learning experience and look to 1991 with great promise.

In his two stints in Pinstripes, Steve Balboni has been known as "Bye-Bye." In his first go around with the Yankees he was called Bye-Bye because of his numerous trips to Columbus. Now it seems the name has more to do with the fact that every time he hits the ball it goes Bye-Bye. Balboni's penchant for long-distance home runs is not lost on Yankee fans. But finding a regular spot in the lineup for the slugger has not been easy.

"It's a difficult transition for me," says Balboni. "I'm a power hitter and to hit homers and drive in runs you need at-bats." Oh yea? Last year he led the team in homers versus lefties and averaged nearly one RBI every eight at-bats. His consistency was off, as a result of his irregular playing time. As a back-up first baseman, part-time designated hitter and occasional pinch-hitter, Steve Balboni's job is to be ready and to produce when he's called on.

1991 YANKEES INFORMATION GUIDE

Now you can have a personal copy of this exciting, fact-filled handbook! It's the same one used by scouts, managers, coaches, baseball executives... and members of the radio, TV and print media who cover the Yankees.

Without a doubt, it's the most complete and thorough guide to the Yankees published anywhere. 268 pages jammed with biographies, photos and stats of each player, manager and coach in the Yankee organization. Plus team records, minor league information, history and trivia.

And again this year, there are new charts detailing how each Yankee player has performed in every American League ballpark over his career. And a new set of stats detailing how AL players have fared against the Yankees. There are also two-page statistical tributes to the 50th anniversary of Joe DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak and the 30th anniversary of the World Champion 1961 Yankees.

The 1991 Yankees Information Guide. It's how Yankee fans become expert Yankee fans! The guide is not available at Yankee Stadium or the newsstand, only by mail. So order your copy today!

THE YANKEES 1991 OFFICIAL YEARBOOK

In its 42nd year of publication, the Yankees Official Yearbook is still one of the most treasured baseball annuals available anywhere.

The 1991 Yearbook features all your favorite players as you browse through 116 pages of full color action photographs. Read about stars like Don Mattingly, Roberto Kelly and Steve Sax and meet the newest Bronx Bombers such as Steve Farr and Scott Sanderson. The 1991 Yankees are an emerging, enthusiastic young club with a lot of promise and the 1991 Yearbook will tell you why.

Also for 1991 are special sections including the always popular Yankees "Family Album," a special section looking back on the 50th anniversary of Joe DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak and a 30th anniversary piece on the 1961 Yankees. Yankees broadcaster Tony Kubek also fondly remembers his '61 teammates in the '91 Yearbook.

Of course, this handsome volume also includes the regular lineup of super features. Vivid color photos. Manager Stump Merrill and his coaches. Career stats on every player. Hot rookies and minor leaguers who may be the next Yankee legends. The folks in the front office, behind the scenes and up in the broadcast booth. And a complete 1991 schedule, listing special days and ticket info.

There's only one Official Yankees Yearbook. Don't miss the best we've ever had!

JOE DIMAGGIO

IN THE YEAR OF THE STREAK

A few years ago a group of baseball savants met in solemn conclave. They dared to contemplate whether such idols of the National Pastime as Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig and Joe DiMaggio might be measured against such iconic Mt. Rushmore figures as Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln.

Fathering one's country? Could Babe's 60 home runs in 1927 compete with that? Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation. Could one fairly match Gehrig's 2,130 consecutive games against that? Authorship of the Declaration of Independence by one-man gang Jefferson. Could DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak of 1941 sensibly vie with such an accomplishment?

Did DiMaggio, sprung from a Sicilian immigrant family, ever dream that he would figure in such an unthinkable hypothetical debate?

BY RAY ROBINSON

In the summer of 1941, in the waning days of The Great Depression, after life had tragically left the once-indestructible body of Lou Gehrig, still another golden Yankee legend was born. In that time 50 years ago, in a world relentlessly heading toward a devastating world war, even as President Franklin D. Roosevelt reassured Americans that "our boys would never be sent into any foreign war," Joe DiMaggio embarked on a streak that will probably forever remain inviolate.

America in 1941 was still relatively insulated against the realities of impending global madness. The country existed in a strange cocoon of surface serenity, marred only by the faraway sounds of Adolf Hitler's Storm Troopers. It was a confused and confusing time. While German planes set off fire all over London, Britain's Royal Air Force, undermanned and dog-tired, bombed Nuremberg. In May, Rudolph Hess, Hitler's buddy, going back to the Beer Hall Putsch of 1923, flew a stolen plane to Scotland, presumably bidding to make a rapprochement with the British.

In June, Hitler attacked Stalin's Soviet Union, after having originally claimed undying affection for his fellow dictator.

Kansas publisher William Allen White's Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies tried to wake up the country to the threat of Hitler. But angry isolationist voices were raised by men like Congressman Ham Fish of New York and Senators Burton Wheeler of Montana and Gerald Nye of North Dakota. That American hero of the recently deceased Roaring '20s Charles Lindbergh, the man popularly known as Lucky Lindy, joined the isolationist chorus. Lindbergh had conquered the Atlantic alone in his "Spirit of St. Louis" in 1927, the same year as Babe and Lou had established themselves as the mightiest force in baseball.

In the other world of fun and games, New York boasted three major league teams. Led by the so-called push-button manager, Joe McCarthy, the Yankees were ready to scale the heights again, after falling to third place in 1940, the first year that Gehrig was out of the lineup since 1925. The Brooklyn Dodgers, under the lash of the former pool hall hustler from West Springfield, MA, Leo Durocher, were positioning themselves for the National League flag, with Pee Wee Reese, Dixie Walker, Pete Reiser, Joe Medwick and Cookie Lavagetto doing wonders for the morale of Ebbets Field denizens. At the Polo Grounds, former first baseman Bill Terry managed the Giants. He was also the last man to hit .400 (.401), accomplishing that feat in 1930.

After winning two straight batting titles in 1939 and 1940, DiMaggio had become the preeminent Yankee, in a lineup dotted with such high achievers as Bill Dickey, Joe Gordon, Red Rolfe, Charlie Keller and pitchers Red Ruffing, Spud Chandler, Atley Donald and Johnny Murphy.

In five years with New York, DiMaggio had performed with such elegance and competence, that he was even able to talk the hard-crusted Ed Barrow, the Yankees GM, into annual pay raises. He had become the living Yankee myth, succeeding both the Babe, the all-time box-office favorite and the quiet, insecure Iron Horse, Lou Gehrig.

DiMaggio was 26 years old, 6-2 and 200 pounds. He had coal black hair and a de Gaullian nose that stood out on an elongated face. Lean and long-legged, he had a surprisingly magisterial manner in one so young. There was no pneumatic drill in his voice box, and he spoke rarely. However, there were times when he could be as chilly as a Vermont winter landscape. He was an introverted man.

Despite his aloofness, DiMaggio became one of the most charismatic personalities of his era, a time already glutted with dominating figures. In Joe's own sphere there was Ted Williams, Boston's slender batting machine, Bob Feller, possibly the fastest pitcher of all time and, of course, Connie Mack, the rail-thin, 79-year-old tactician of the Athletics.

Outside of baseball, there was the honey-voiced FDR and Winston Churchill, with his bulldog grasp on the British psyche. In Hollywood, Clark Gable was every woman's nominee for lover and boyfriend. In the world of books Ernest Hemingway, an admirer of DiMaggio (he later wrote Joe into his fiction as a metaphor for perfection), wrestled with his typewriter and African lions. In New York's political arena, the tiny buzzsaw of a Mayor, Fiorello La Guardia, like DiMaggio of Italian heritage, was ubiquitous and outspoken. The Brown Bomber, Joe Louis, stirred the hearts of Harlemites and ruled the heavyweight roost, just as Walter Winchell reigned over the noisy quidnuncs of the press and Bing Crosby crooned as no American singer had ever crooned before. It was indeed a time of giants, inside and outside the sports world.

When the 1941 season began DiMaggio had already hit in 19 straight games in spring training. The he added eight games at the start of the regular season. Batting over .500 at this stage, DiMaggio was giving American League pitchers as little chance to get him out as Britain's RAF had of halting Hitler's Luftwaffe.

Then inexplicably, Joe slumped. His average plummeted from over .500 to a quiet .300. Even Joe's brother, Dominic, the bespectacled outfielder for the Boston Red Sox, was ahead of him at .368.

On May 15, with the Yankees playing the White Sox on a flypaper-sticky day at Yankee Stadium, DiMaggio, batting fourth in the lineup, singled once against southpaw Edgar Smith. Nobody knew it at the time, but baseball's most revered streak had begun.

Soon DiMaggio's efforts would be celebrated in Alan Courtney's lyrics - "Joe, Joe DiMaggio, we want you on our side," - and millions of impassioned words would be written in tribute to this tall, silent hero of pre-World War II in America.

DiMaggio's magnificent tapestry of consistency continued on through May days that were cluttered with speculation about Hess's strange aerial adventure. There were also fallacious reports that Germany's fighter, Max Schmeling had been killed in action in Crete while trying to flee capture by the British. There was news too, about DiMaggio's old Detroit Tigers' rival, Hank Greenberg, who was working his way through the first days of his military basic training.

On Monday afternoon, June 2, Joe connected for two hits off Feller in Cleveland, as he moved one-third of the way toward a record that would captivate America. That night, three weeks short of his 38th birthday, Gehrig died in his sleep in Riverdale, NY.

A one-hopper over White Sox shortstop Luke Appling's head on June 17 sent the streak to 30 games, an all-time Yankees mark. The next night, Joe Louis retained his heavyweight title at the Polo Grounds by knocking out the converted light-heavyweight, Billy Conn, in the final seconds of the 13th round. A spectator at the fight, DiMaggio drew rousing applause from the fans when he entered the ballpark. Earlier in the day, DiMaggio extended the streak to 31 games with a bloop single past the reach of Appling. DiMaggio tied Wee Willie Keeler's record of 44, established back in 1897, on July 1 at Yankee Stadium. In a doubleheader against Boston, before a crowd of over 52,00 mid-week fans, Joe connected in both games, as the streak hurtled to 44.

"For the fans there was no escape from the magnetic force that drew them to their radios to hear the news announcer report the grim but still dreamlike news of the war in Europe and then, at some point in the program, add 'and Joe DiMaggio got his hit today to extend'..." Dave Anderson wrote.

The day Joe tied Keeler, football player Shipwreck Kelly married Brenda Diana Duff Frazier, a whoopee-making super-debutante of the '30s. More ominous, however, was Secretary of the Navy Knox's pronouncement that it was time for the U.S. Navy to "clear the Atlantic of the German menace."

Gehrig's centerfield monument was unveiled at Yankee Stadium on July 6, with over 60,000 fans witnessing the ceremony. DiMaggio made certain he didn't let down the audience, as he cracked out six hits in the doubleheader against Philadelphia. In the process, his remarkable skein went to 48.

On July 11 number 50 followed, as Joe whacked St. Louis pitching for four hits. At this point Joe had gone on a spree of 16 hits in 25 at-bats. His bat seemed to grow hotter as war clouds grew closer by the day.

The streak went on to 53 on July 13 before 50,387 in Chicago's Comiskey Park. It was the largest crowd to visit Comiskey since the inaugural All-Star Game in 1933. The next day Joe sent the streak to 54, with a lucky hit through the infield against the White Sox. On the same day Hollywood producer Samuel Goldwyn announced he would film the life story of Gehrig. One of those immediately mentioned as a candidate to play the ill-fated Lou was a former sportscaster and Grade-B actor named Ronald Reagan. (Gary Cooper eventually won the part.)

On July 15, DiMaggio prolonged his streak against Ed Smith, the same White Sox hurler that he had faced when he began his historic barrage back on May 15, exactly two months before. On the same afternoon, Harold Ickes, FDR's curmudgeonly Secretary of the Interior, blasted Lindbergh as "The Knight of the German Eagle." Whether the American public realized it or not, war was drawing closer.

The record pace went on in Cleveland the next day, as Joe banged out three hits against the Indians. The streak now stood at 56, way beyond any baseball mortal of the past and presumably beyond the reach of any player of the future.

"How did DiMaggio do?" had become a daily ritual question posed each morning in millions of American households. It went along with the morning toast and coffee.

A roaring crowd of 68,000 showed up in Cleveland on the night of July 17 to root for Joe and the home team, at the same time. But this time ill fortune finally caught up with DiMaggio's potent bat. In his first two at-bats against lefty Al Smith, Joe drove vicious line drives that third baseman Kenny Keltner managed to snare. In the eighth inning, facing Jim Bagby, DiMaggio hit a bouncer up the middle in the direction of shortstop Lou Boudreau, who turned it into a double play. With that, the streak had ended.

Puffing on his inevitable Camel after the game, Joe acknowledged that "I wanted the streak to go on forever . . . but when they take them away from you, the way Keltner did, there's nothing a fellow can do about it . . . anyway, it's all over now."

Following the night of July 17, DiMaggio went on another hitting binge of 16 games. If Keltner hadn't barred the way, Joe could have expanded his streak to 73 straight games!

"The only person who could stop Joe in 1941," baseball author Michael Gershman observed, "was a traffic cop who gave him a ticket on the way to spring training."

Over the 56-game stretch, DiMaggio posted these statistics:

- 223 at-bats
- 91 hits
- .408 batting average
- 16 doubles
- 4 triples
- 15 home runs
- 55 runs batted in
- 21 bases on balls
- 7 strikeouts
- 56 runs

Less than six months later, on December 7, bombs rained down on the Hawaiian island of Oahu. The Japanese were attacking Pearl Harbor, an American naval base in the Pacific and a place that few Americans actually had ever heard of. The sneak assault cost 2,280 American lives and 1,109 wounded. The "day of infamy," as President Roosevelt called it the next day, had set off World War II. ①

110,112 hits. And counting.

This year, the 2,106 baseball games played in the major leagues will yield tens of thousands of hits, walks, strikeouts, stolen bases, double plays and runs.

They will produce a staggering mountain of statistics that'll be chewed up and pored over by sportswriters, fans and teams alike. Over and over again, statistics will fuel not only official records and standings, but also good-natured arguments and the booming hobby of fantasy leagues.

Data covering everything from batting averages, stolen bases, and won-lost percentages to more obscure considerations like whether a team plays better on grass or artificial turf, or at night instead of daytime.

Ever since the first ball was thrown, measurements have been made on just about every aspect of the game, not just to establish current team and player rankings and correlate past performance with future success, but to enrich the lore and preserve the legends of our national pastime.

Needless to say, accuracy and speed in juggling these figures are paramount. What better endeavor to utilize the power of the computer?

So, four years ago, Major League Baseball and IBM embarked on a joint effort to create what is now known as the MLB-IBM Baseball Information System (BIS).

Now, from the very first pitch of opening day to the last play of the World Series, the results of every player who steps to the plate are recorded and analyzed faster than a Nolan Ryan fastball. (In fact, as of last season, we've logged 110,112 hits.)

Whether he struck out or singled. Whether there's a walk or a ground-rule double. Bases stolen or runs batted in. It's all entered by a representative from the home team working on an IBM Personal System/2® computer in the press box.

After the game, a complete report is printed out containing long and short box scores and complete year-to-date statistics as well as a play-by-play narrative of the game (by the time the reporters return from postgame interviews and in plenty of time to meet newspaper deadlines). Reporters have hailed the BIS an absolute gift.

It saves them endless calculations. And, with the accompanying narrative report of each game, it helps jog the memory in case anything was left out of their notes.

The postgame information is then sent electronically to a central host computer at MLB headquarters in New York. There, the larger computer, an IBM AS/400®, compiles the statistics, along with the data and statistics of every other game played that day.

Until the MLB-IBM System, many types of statistical reports were only available once a week or monthly, or not at all. Now, by 9 o'clock the next morning, the host computer makes available reports covering more than 29 categories (and growing) for all 26 clubs.

In addition to reports for all teams, individual team intelligence reports provide detailed performance data in many areas such as how pitchers perform in late innings or a hitter's ability to advance runners in certain situations or his batting effectiveness against righties or lefties. Today, this information is a vital element of managerial strategy, coaching help and even front office moves.

In total, the massive effort produces over 300 daily reports during the season and an additional 360 postseason reports covering 48 more categories.

It also provides online data for the press at the World Series and All Star games, and because it's instantaneous, BIS ensures reporters get up-to-date stats in the event of last-minute changes.

Finally, the system provides accurate statistics for MLB publications like the official League Red and Green books.

In a very short time, the MLB-IBM system has had a very profound effect on how our nation's favorite game is played and enjoyed.

And, while the importance of many contributions made to baseball over the years can never accurately be measured, happily, now there is something that can.

Roger Maris and Mickey Mantle - the M&M Boys.

In 1961, Roger Maris wore a crew cut and shared a Queens apartment with Mickey Mantle and Bob Cerv. Maris usually cooked breakfast, first frying the bacon, then the eggs in the same pan as the bacon, making them come out an unappetizing black from the grease, but still good to the taste according to Mantle and Cerv. While Maris was in the kitchen, Cerv and Mantle often were in the living room, putting a golf ball on the carpet into a tin cup, the stakes being a nickel a shot. When it was time to go to work, the three Yankee outfielders rode to the ballpark in Maris' convertible with the top down, young men feeling the air wash their faces and knowing the world was at their feet.

Whitey Ford

Sixty-one was when Yankees players such as Tony Kubek, Clete Boyer and Bill Stafford spent the summer at a place called the Stadium Motor Lodge, a two-story motel about eight blocks from Yankee Stadium. They walked to the park, hearing corner vendors hawking afternoon newspapers and smelling fresh hot dogs and pretzels. It seemed as if their feet barely touched the sidewalk as they floated, knowing that they were a member of the best baseball team in the world, maybe even the best baseball team the world has ever seen. After the games, they often ate at a steakhouse called the Dutchman, off 161st Street, where you ordered your steak by the ounce and where the door was guarded by two huge Dobermans. Some of the older waiters told stories of Babe Ruth having a few beers then sliding head first on the sawdust-covered floors into tables.

Sixty-one was when Kennedy was in the White House, Camelot was a state of mind and the future seemed like one bright, limitless horizon. It was a year of men and myth, a year when a very human Roger Maris chased the legend of Babe Ruth, a year when the Yankees won 109 games. They hammered 240 home runs, still a league record and they did it without the benefit of the designated hitter. It was a year when Maris would indeed hit 61 homers, and Mantle might have equaled the feat had he not been injured. It was when the sale of M & M candies soared—even though the players did not endorse them, the candy simply had the initials for Mantle and Maris. A stripper went by the name of Mickey Maris, and the two sluggers posed together for pictures so often that Mantle said, "I'm starting to feel like a Siamese twin."

Sixty-one was when the Yankees swept past the Cincinnati Reds in the World Series in five games despite the fact that a hobbled Mantle hardly played. It was a year when men played baseball for the boyish love of the game, not the paycheck. Mantle earned $75,000, Maris made a mere $42,000 and it was Maris — not Mantle — who was coming off an MVP season in 1960. It also was when Whitey Ford became a 20-game winner for the first time and when Luis Arroyo saved 20 games for the only time in his career.

Sixty-one was when the team was assembled for a LOOK magazine photo, the players decked out in business suits and briefcases. The point being that they were like one of America's greatest, bloodless industries—U.S. Steel—an image that many of the players resent to this day. As short-stop-turned broadcaster Kubek has often said, reducing those men to machines diminished what they did, especially Maris. His old teammates remember how Maris would arrive at Big Pete Sheehy's clubhouse, a man who dated back to the days of Ruth. Maris would sit at a massive oak table in the middle of the room, a table that was as old as Sheehy, and have his ever-present coffee and Camels. He often played a strange game. He held a box, about a foot wide and three inches deep with 40 holes on two platforms inside. The idea was to maneuver a steel ball through the maze of holes—he would spend hours there—playing the game, smoking Camels and sipping coffee in a well-honed routine. It was a place where he could be away for it all — the reporters, the fans, the ghost of Ruth.

While Maris sat at the table, Mantle went into the trainer's room to be taped and prepared for the game. As usual, the pain in Mantle's aching knees was omnipresent. Kubek and Maris remember helping Mantle out of the back of cabs because his legs simply hurt too much after games.

In the manager's office was Ralph Houk, the former backup Yankee catcher following a legend of his own - Casey Stengel, who was fired after New York lost the 1960 World Series to Pittsburgh on Bill Mazeroski's ninth inning homer. This was Houk's first year managing the team and his mandate was simple--win it all. The American League pennant wouldn't be enough. Pressure? Of course there was. But the Yankee players knew that Houk was a legitimate war hero, a Silver Star winner from the Battle of the Bulge. In the war, he was honored for "exposing himself to withering fire, although the fire was so intense that his clothes were torn away by enemy machine gun bullets, yet Lt. Houk calmly moved from one position to the next, directing his men." At his home, Houk still has a helmet on a bookcase. There are two holes—one from where a sniper's bullet went in and the other where it came out—when Houk was part of a unit that stormed Omaha Beach. The force of the shot knocked Houk over, but left him without a scratch. Houk has a war story, one he seldom tells, of an attack on a hill when he was the only soldier to walk away when it was over.

Now you know why the players called him the Major, why they sensed something inside of him, something that made them know he was someone who could be counted upon. That was why Houk had the credibility to convince Yogi Berra to give up his spot behind the plate and move to leftfield. Houk explained that the time had come for Elston Howard and John Blanchard to handle the pitchers, that the Yankees still needed Yogi Berra, but they needed him in the outfield. A man with a bigger ego than Berra or a rookie manager with less respect from the players than Houk, and the whole thing would have ended up as screaming tabloid headlines about the Yankees mired in controversy. Instead, it was nothing more than a footnote in spring training stories. Houk's batting order had Bobby Richardson leading off, Kubek second, Maris third and Mantle fourth.

What did it mean to hit in front on Mantle?

Consider that Maris set a home run record, yet never received an intentional walk.

What did it mean to bat in front of Maris?

"Roger was in such a groove that year that he knew exactly where I was supposed to stand in the left-handed batters box," said Kubek. "I used to dig a hole with my back foot, and if it was a little off, Roger would come back to the dugout and tell me."

How strong was the Yankee order that season?

Consider that Bill "Moose" Skowron hit 28 homers, and he batted seventh! This is the same Moose Skowron who was convinced by Ford and Mantle to serve as their driver one fateful spring training night. They outfitted the first baseman in a chauffeur's uniform and cap. He drove the two stars from one classy St. Petersburg restaurant to the next, telling the managers of the various places that he had Mantle and Ford in the car and they needed a great table.

Platooning behind the plate, Howard and Blanchard combined for 42 homers and 131 RBI. Howard was the first black to wear a Yankee uniform, and the color of his skin was the reason he couldn't stay at the team's spring training hotel. He roomed with a family in the black section of St. Petersburg, as it also is worth remembering that '61 was three years before the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Houk also coaxed Ford into his greatest season. Stengel had been concerned about Ford's arm and durability, usually limiting him to one start a week. From 1957-60, Ford won only 11, 14, 16, and 12 games. Houk gave the ball to Ford every four days and when he looked up at the end of the season, Ford had 25 wins and Howard was calling the lefty,"Chairman of the Board." Fifteen of those victories were saved by "Yo-Yo" as Stengel used to call Arroyo. When summoned from the bullpen, he walked to the mound with his hat tilted slightly to the right, a wad of tobacco stuffed in his left cheek, his ample stomach bouncing and his glove pounding against his side with every step. Before coming to the Yankees, Arroyo's major league career mark was 18-22 with one save. But for that one precious season, he went 15-5, saved 29 games and even batted .280. He would never approach those kinds of numbers again.

Few people remember that when the season began, Maris was in a major slump, batting only .210 with four homers in the middle of May. He had hit only one homer in April. He confided to friends that he'd "never hit more than 25-30 homers." The Yankees were so concerned that they sent Maris to an eye doctor, who determined there was nothing wrong with Maris' vision — his swing was out of his jurisdiction, however. Maris had been with three teams in four years. He arrived in New York wearing Pat Boone white buckskin shoes and wishing that he had never been traded by Kansas City to the Yankees. Hard as it is to believe now, Maris was suffering a major crisis of confidence early in his record-shattering season.

Roger Maris crosses the plate after his first 1961 World Series hit—a home run.

On the morning of May 21, the Yankees were 18-15. Maris had only six homers and the team had 34 in 33 games. Then, the team started to win, and everyone began to hit, and hit for distance.

Maris got hot in June, and he changed his routine. Instead of eating breakfast at his apartment, he met close friend Big Julie Isaacson, a New York labor leader. They met every morning at the Stage Deli and Maris ordered baloney and eggs for both of them. Maris crushed 12 homers in 17 games and by July 9, Maris had 33 home runs, Mantle 29.

That was when the talk of Ruth's record began. In 1927, Ruth had 60 homers, which was so astounding that it ceased to be special. Sixty home runs was more than any other American League team hit in 1927. Ruth already had every home run record known to man. As longtime Yankee statman

Roger Maris acknowledges the crowd after his record-setting 61st homer.

Bill Kane said, "Writers who covered Ruth didn't think it was a big deal when he hit 60. They just figured he'd hit 62 the next year."

Of course, Ruth never did. And the record seemed to be etched in cement-until Maris and Mantle made their run in '61.

"I went after that record year after year," said Mantle. "The tough part is that you'll be right on pace with Ruth until September, and that's when he hit 17 homers. That's a killer."

In fact, Ruth had 20 homers in his final 32 games. Much was made of the fact that Ruth's 60 homers came in a 154-game schedule-actually,

Mickey Mantle connects for another home run.

Ruth played 151 games. So the pressure was on Maris not only to break the record, but to do it in 154 games. Commissioner Ford Frick ruled that it would count only if it were done in 154 games. Not so coincidentally, Frick was a former Ruth ghostwriter.

While Mantle kept close to Maris in the home run derby during most of the season, the press attention and the pressure was mostly on Maris. He was a newer face. While not having the same sense of humor as Mantle, Maris made more time for reporters. At that time, there were seven daily papers in New York. They tried to portray Mantle and Maris as feuding, because Gehrig and Ruth did. They said that their Yankee teammates wanted Mantle-not Maris-to break the record. On this point, they were correct. But the reason wasn't a knock on Maris, "rather we just knew Mickey longer and knew him better," said Kubek. "When Mickey got hurt, all of us rallied behind Roger." Houk covered the middle ground, stating, "I hope both my guys break the record."

By September 10, Maris had 56 homers, Mantle had 53 and the Yankees had an 11 1/2 game lead over Detroit. The next day, Mantle contracted a flu virus. He went to see a doctor, who gave him a shot. Unfortunately, the needle hit a bone in Mantle's hip, and the centerfielder ended up with a serious infection that landed him in the hospital with a 104-degree temperature. Mantle tried to play several times after that, but would hit only one more homer and finish with 54.

By September 17, Maris had 58 home runs. He said that when he circled the bases and stepped on home plate, "I realized that only Babe Ruth ever hit more home runs than me. That means an awful lot."

The last three homers would be agonizing, however. The date of the 154th game was September 20. Only 21,023 showed up at Memorial Stadium in Baltimore, which was Ruth's hometown. With Mantle out, Yogi Berra had moved into the fourth spot behind Maris and no disrespect intended to Berra, but there was a difference in the kind of pitches Maris was seeing. Berra just didn't scare pitchers as much as Mantle, but then again, who did? Maris slashed his 59th homer, but no more. According to Commissioner Frick, the quest was over.

But there were still eight games left on the schedule. When Maris did connect for No. 60-off Baltimore's Jack Fisher before 19,041 at Yankee Stadium-it was September 25 and Maris' 158th game. The reaction in most of the country was summed up in a Milwaukee Journal headline: "60 Too Late."

The Yankees' final three games of the season were at the Stadium against Boston. A Sacramento restaurant owner was willing to pay $5,000 to anyone who caught Maris' 61st home run ball. That came in the final game of the season. The rightfield stands were packed with fans hoping Maris would pull one in their direction. All of the Yankee pitchers but starter Bill Stafford were in the bullpen, as they also wanted to catch Maris' home run ball and collect the five grand.

It happened in the third inning. Boston's Tracy Stallard's first pitch was in the dirt and fans booed, not wanting Maris to walk. The second delivery was a fastball over the heart of the plate at the knees and Maris sent it into the rightfield stands. A fan raised his coat over his head and the ball landed in the coat. Then a truck driver by the name of Sal Durante leaned over and took the ball out of the coat. Durante refused the $5,000 and offered to give the ball to Maris. Maris said, "The kid has a lot of bills to pay, he should make what he can off the ball." Maris' friend, Big Julie Isaacson, was writing Durante a $5,000 check so Maris could get the ball. Maris saw it and ripped up the check, telling Big Julie, "No ball is worth five grand." Sam Gordon, the restaurant owner, paid Durante the $5,000. Then he put the ball on display at his Sam's Ranch Wagon for awhile, before giving it back to Maris.

Mantle wasn't even in the park when Maris broke the record.

"I was in a hospital bed and I got goosebumps just watching it," said Mantle.

There was much talk about how the record would be recorded, the famed "asterisk" controversy. But it reads like this in the record book:

61 Roger E. Maris, AL: NY, 1961 (162 G/S)

60 George H. Ruth AL: NY, 1927

But it is Mantle who put the subject in perspective: "In my mind, the 61 homers is the greatest feat in baseball history. You cut away all the crap and it comes down to the fact that Roger had to hit all those home runs and no one had ever hit as many before or since." ☺

After 30 years memories fade, even when the subject is the '61 Yankees, one of the best baseball teams ever assembled. There was a lot to see and hear in the clubhouse both before and after each game, especially as the pennant race developed and Roger Maris and Mickey Mantle got closer to The Babe's record of 60 home runs. By the time September rolled around the media crush and the clamor for one-on-one interviews with the M & M boys could have been a huge distraction. Somehow, Manager Ralph Houk was able to prevent petty jealousies from upsetting the primary team focus of winning the pennant and preparing for the World Series.

About a year before he died, Pete Sheehy, the head Yankee clubhouse attendant, and I sat at his large oak table, still the focal point of the Yankee dressing room. We reminisced about events from that year. "Big Pete," like the table, went back to the days of Ruth and Gehrig. We talked about Whitey Ford dubbed "The Chairman of the Board" by Ellie Howard, and the occasional practical jokes he played on some of the younger pitchers like Bill Stafford or Rollie Sheldon to loosen them up and make them feel like part of the team.

I'm sure, during his wildest nightmares, Bill still sees Whitey's kids' pet iguana in his glove in the Stadium bullpen. The miniature golf course set up in the dirt under the stands adjacent to the bullpen helped some of our relief pitchers alleviate the pressures that ballplayers always face.

We spoke of Mickey taking over the team leadership role just as Ralph wanted. And did he ever. What a great start the Mick had helping the terrific burden "The Major" was under, replacing the legendary and popular Casey Stengel, and setting the pace for the great home run chase.

The coaching staff, hand-picked by the Skipper, was undeniably one of the best ever. They influenced the strategy on the field as well as the atmosphere in the clubhouse.

There has never been a better coach than Frank Crosetti. Nor was there a man who wore the Pinstripes and played such an integral part in so many World Championships. The "Crow" watched baseballs like a hawk and made certain everyone was on time for infield practice. He made more quick decisions to win games from his third base coaching spot than anyone in the history of the game.

What I didn't know, until Big Pete told me, was that Frankie was often the middleman of his practical jokes. You could never get rid of anything old, worn out, and sweaty. Whether it was a glove, shoes or a sweatshirt that had seen its better days, it always reappeared, sometimes months later.

In spring training, Joe DeMaestri discarded a jockstrap that had to go back to his days with the old St. Louis Browns. It showed up in his locker in May in Kansas City, only to be ashcanned again.

In July, a perplexed Joe D. found it perched on his locker in Fenway. In late September, as the schedule was running out on Roger in Baltimore, the jock-toting poltergeist struck again. The final reappearance was at World Series time in Crosley Field, Cincinnati. There was a ritualistic burning in the center of the clubhouse with plenty of witnesses in hopes it wouldn't turn up for spring training 1962. Little did we know that part of the Crow's job description included garbage can scavenging.

Johnny Sain was the pitching coach who convinced Whitey and the rest of the starting staff that they could pitch on shorter rest and be more effective. Sain was a pilot too, and applied the principles of aerodynamics to imparting spin on the baseball to create better movement. Having used these theories to improve his screwball, he refined Luis Arroyo's, and for the '61 season helped make him the best closer in the game.

Wally Moses was our hitting instructor and first base coach. He was an outstanding base runner in his day. He never expected any credit for Roger's big season, but we all knew he had plenty to do with it. On a train ride to Washington in the midst of a deep slump, Roger finally asked for "peepsights" advice. I don't know what he told him, but almost immediately, a phenomenal home run streak began that lasted until the end of the season.

Led by Mickey, the '61 Yankees were a team gifted with outstanding speed at the top of the order. Had this team played in a base-stealing era, it would have stolen a lot more bases. As it was, Wally brought the added dimension of forcing the opposition into mistakes by always looking for the extra base and intimidating defensive infielders by sliding harder than we ever had before.

From his constant reminders in the clubhouse, we developed into a great baserunning team.

The Yankees' quiet man on the coaching staff was one of the greatest defensive catchers the game will ever see. Just ask Feller, Wynn, Lemon, Garcia or any pitcher who threw to "Hegs," or any hitter who tried to outguess him. Every once in awhile, after a day-game win on the road, Jim Hegan could be convinced to go to dinner with a bunch of guys, only under the condition that the restaurant we picked had a piano bar for a little late night barbershop harmony. Downbeat Magazine wouldn't dare rate the singing voices of the motley crew that usually assembled. You would probably be surprised if I told you that Yogi Berra wasn't bad, although he never knew the right lyrics. Hector Lopez was an entertaining addition as he would dance the mambo to anything we sang. All Roger did was shake his head negatively as Mickey constantly requested and sang hillbilly songs with his "Okie" twang, some of which he claimed to have written. "Moose" Skowron and I kept requesting Polkas, but the pianist's accompanist, "Spud" Murray, our batting practice pitcher, couldn't play them fast enough on his ever-present harmonica. He sure could play some great Stephen Foster songs. When he did, we just sat back, relaxed and listened to Hegs' crystal clear Irish tenor voice, sometimes letting curfew pass us by.

In conversing with Big Pete, I had the weirdest recollection of the '61 season. I recalled something that both Bobby Richardson and

KUBEK REMEMBERS

John Blanchard had mentioned during the year. Bobby and Clete Boyer were the two main reasons why that Yankee team won so many games defensively. Nobody has ever had a year winning ballgames as a pinchhitter like "Orbie." John had four consecutive home runs and was robbed of the fifth when it was taken out of the rightfield stands at the Stadium on a great catch. Unfortunately, he was stuck behind Yogi and Ellie.

But back to my weird recollection. It had to do with Bobby and John's comments about the awful, acrid smell in the air within the clubhouse which was obnoxious to many of us. It was in everything; our shoes, socks, uniforms, street clothes, everywhere. We took it home with us. Big Pete finally clued me in. "Tony," he said, "it was 'Little Pete.'"

It seems that after every one of our wins and every one of Arroyo's saves or wins, Ralph Houk and Luis had a victory cigar. One of Little Pete Previte's jobs was to keep the clubhouse tidy before, during, and after games, and it seems he convinced our two cigar smokers that he should share one of their celebratory stogies with them. After awhile, with ballplayers being so superstitious, it became routine for the seemingly foot-long rolled missiles to be seen protruding from between his lips. He spent considerable time in each locker as the smoke wafted up our pants legs and shirtsleeves. Remember, we won 109 games in '61 and Luis saved 29 and won 15. Perhaps, even more strangely, after all these years, I find myself wanting another deep whiff of that pungent odor, somehow, sweetened through time. I'd guess that "Bullet" Bob Turley, Ralph (can't use his nickname) Terry, Jim Coates, Bud Daley, and the rest of the guys feel the same.

The 1961 Yankees had immense physical ability. What was less apparent, but made this team so unique in baseball history, is that it was a bunch of ordinary guys who loved coming to the clubhouse and being together, took tremendous pride in playing the game right and knew exactly what should be done. Yankee fans are special — in '61 they saw a special team.

Tony Kubek played for the Yankees from 1957-65 and is in his second season broadcasting Yankees games for the Madison Square Garden Network.

When a Yankee pitcher allows a batter to reach first base, he still knows he can enjoy a certain comfort level. He still knows if he can get the next batter to hit a ground ball to the left side it will be vacuumed up by shortstop Alvaro Espinoza. The Venezuelan can ignite a double play like no other player in the American League. "Espy" owns a relatively small fielder's glove, but for the past two years it has paid huge dividends to the Yankees. "I just love to turn double plays," he says. "I love it. It gets everybody excited and it makes everybody feel good."

Now with his hitting mentor Frank Howard back in the Yankee fold, Espinoza intends to regain his sweet stroke of 1989 when he hit a surprising .282. Says Espy, "I think it's going to be a great year."

Some of the greatest names in baseball started with us.

Before they took their first nervous swing at a pitch and before they even learned to keep their eye on the ball, they enjoyed their first delicious bowl of Kellogg's Cereal. For over eighty years now, Kellogg's Cereals have been a favorite part of a healthy breakfast for kids all over America. So, it's no surprise that many kids who grow up eating Kellogg's Cereals do go on to greatness. Kellogg's is proud to be the official cereal of Major League Baseball. It's only natural, since many of the greatest names in baseball still start their day with a bowl of Kellogg's Cereal.

The future of Pat Sheridan's baseball career lies squarely on his shoulders. Or more to the point, with his left-handed swing. Yankees General Manager Gene Michael desperately wants to add more left-handed firepower to the Yankee offense, and Sheridan could fill that role. Last year Sheridan, 33, played only part of the season with the Cubs' Triple-A Iowa team. For this season the outfielder has signed a contract with the Yankees' Triple-A team at Columbus. The rest is up to Sheridan. With more than six years of major league experience, Sheridan knows what it takes to get the job done. And with the Yankees in need of a strong left-handed bat, there's a job for the taking.

For catcher Bob Geren, it comes down to putting it all together. In 1989 Geren opened some eyes by hitting .288 in 65 games with the Yankees. Last season, while his offense dropped into the .220s, he continued to be one of the league's best defensive catchers.

Geren gunned down about 40 percent of the runners attempting to steal on him, a main reason why the Yankees were among the major league leaders in that category. Geren would like nothing better than to combine those two seasons into a stellar 1991.

"Defensively, I know that I have a strong arm and that I call a good game," says Geren. "I've shown at the plate that I can hit at this level, and I feel I learned a lot last year."

Let's call it finding a groove. Eric Plunk got on a roll in 1990 and has been one of the Yankees' most effective relievers. His development has evolved since coming to New York from Oakland in June 1989. Plunk has been used in long relief, short relief, as a stopper and even as a starter.

Plunk, despite a blazing fastball, has had difficulty with his control.

"He worked very hard on his control," says pitching coach Mark Connor. "The results of his efforts have been very evident." Last season Plunk was among the team leaders in ERA. If he can continue to find the plate, you can bet that Eric Plunk won't worry again about not pitching. A guy who throws as hard as he does, with accuracy, never has to worry about getting into the game.

BODY WARS

Walt Disney World is going hog wild with fun! (Apologies to Miss Piggy.) There's so much magic, in fact, it now takes four days to see and do everything.

The most exciting news, of course, is the Disney-MGM Studios Theme Park, where the Muppets have arrived with two wocka-wocka wacky shows.

You'll also see the breathtaking Indiana Jones Epic Stunt Spectacular and ride Star Tours, a thrilling adventure from the creative forces of Disney and George Lucas presented by M&M's® Chocolate Candies.

Not to be outdone, Epcot Center now features Body Wars, a furious ride through the human bloodstream; plus the world's most spectacular nighttime laser-light show and the 3-D movie of the century, "Captain EO."

Over in the Magic Kingdom you'll actually walk through Mickey's own house in Mickey's Starland, see the fabulous Disney Character Hit Parade, ride Big Thunder Mountain

Railroad, Space Mountain and ... Whee!

How to see it all? Consider this exciting idea, Disney's 4-Day All Three Parks Passport. It's our best ticket value and it's good anytime — this year, next year, whenever. It never expires.

But the best reason to buy the 4-Day Passport is that it lets you go Walt Disney Wild!

GUETTERMAN

Who would have thought in 1987 when little-known Lee Guetterman arrived in New York that the lanky lefty would someday be the ace of the Yankees bullpen?

With the departure of relief artist Dave Righetti to San Francisco and Guetterman's own success, the Yankees can feel quite comfortable with the six-foot-eight-inch reliever emerging from the bullpen during a game's critical juncture.

Last season Guetterman achieved the unusual when he became the first reliever in Yankee history to lead the pitching staff in wins (11).

As the role of the middle reliever becomes more specialized and recognized, it's the unheralded Guetterman who is quietly becoming one of the premier set-up men in baseball.

Last season his 64 appearances led the club and 93 relief innings were eighth in the league. While Guetterman has proven to be tough on all hitters, his intimidating size on the mound has been especially effective against lefties, who have not hit a homer off him since September 26, 1989.

In addition to his role in the middle innings, the Yankees' lefty could see time as a closer. With the signing of right-hander reliever Steve Farr, the Yankees one-two punch in the bullpen could be a knockout combination.

Dave Eiland enjoyed a sensational 1990 season. He wants 1991 to be even better. Named Pitcher-of-the-Year in the Triple-A International League last year, Eiland now has his sights set on the American League. He has mastered an outstanding sinker which he thinks will catapult him into a full major league season. The organization showed confidence in the 24-year-old right-hander by calling him up last September and again this spring by letting him fight for a starting spot in the rotation.

"I think I can do a lot for the club," Eiland says. "I don't expect anyone to hand me anything, but if they show confidence in me I'll show them that they made the right decision."

For Yankee pitcher Rich Monteleone, changing from the West Coast to the East Coast may be just what the doctor ordered.

Acquired by New York last season from the California Angels, the right-handed pitcher put up some strong numbers for the Triple-A Columbus Clippers in 1990.

Working strictly as a reliever, Monteleone collected a team-high nine saves and an impressive 2.44 ERA. For his efforts, he was called up to New York in September and saw limited playing time but hopes this season will be different.

Selected by the Detroit Tigers organization in 1982, Monteleone pitched for the Seattle Mariners before finding a place with the Angels in 1988. If things work according to plans, pitching in Pinstripes could make his last move his best move.

Right-hander Mike Witt could not have asked for a better start to his 1990 season. Combining with Mark Langston, Witt, the then-California Angel, helped no-hit the Seattle Mariners in the Angels' home opener. One month later the 10-year veteran was relegated to the role of reliever and was traded for long-time Yankee outfielder Dave Winfield.

Once in Pinstripes, Witt was inserted into his familiar role as starter and expressed his enthusiasm.

"My job is to go seven, eight, nine (innings), keep us in the game, give up three runs or less, and let the chips fall where they may. I look forward to that," he said.

In his 16 starts for the Yankees, Witt won five games. His season was interrupted on June 8 when he heard his arm "pop" pitching versus Baltimore. He was placed on the disabled list for the first time in his career, but came back strong after the injury.

Right-handed hitters batted just .208 against the big righty, and in his six losses, the Yankees scored just 10 runs.

Yankee fans are excited to see this tower of power healthy again, and with a little more offensive support he could be just what the doctor ordered.

Steve Howe has taken a lot of chances in his career and in his life. However, this year he asked the Yankees to take a chance on him. In February, the ex-Dodger walked into the Yankees' spring training facility in Fort Lauderdale, FL and attempted to regain the pitching form that made him one of the game's brightest, young stars in the early 1980s.

He had not pitched to major league batters since he left the Texas Rangers in 1987. His only pro experience since then came last year with Salinas, an independent club in the Class-A California League, where he was 0-1 with a 2.12 ERA in 10 appearances. Elbow surgery robbed him of a good portion of the 1990 season so he played winter ball in the Mexican League. A strong showing there convinced Howe to take another shot at the majors.

Howe accepted his Yankee opportunity with much gratitude. Placed in a situation he had yearned for, the 33-year-old left-hander was intent on showing people his new life and his renewed ability. Finding a spot for his 92-mph fastball in the New York bullpen was utmost in his mind.

"I feel good," Howe said before the season began. "This is what kept me going--the dream that I would be back."

Each year the New York Yankees reach out to the community to help the area's youth in many ways.

Kevin Maas greets representatives from the New York Institute for Special Education. Last year the Yankees and Chevrolet donated a 1990 Chevrolet Lumina to the Institute to aid their work with handicapped children.

The youngsters above are recipients of college scholarships contributed by the Silver Shield Foundation.

As part of the Yankees Winter Caravan following the '90 season Alvaro Espinoza and Jim Leyritz visited the students and faculty of John F. Kennedy, Jr. High School in the Bronx.

A strong commitment to the community has always been one of the most important objectives of the New York Yankees. Again in 1991 the Yankees will be heavily involved with numerous charities, non-profit organizations, schools and youth groups in the New York City metropolitan area.

Aside from the work with the organizations listed below, the Yankees this year are inaugurating a new program entitled Project Achieve. During the 1991 season the Yankees will adopt and visit 32 high schools throughout New York City's five boroughs. The schools have been chosen by the New York City Board of Education. Each Yankee player and coach will participate in the program by speaking to students about drug awareness, the benefits of a good education and, of course, baseball.

Project Achieve has already been received enthusiastically by the students, staff, parents and players alike and should prove to be a very beneficial program to City of New York.

Here is a brief list of just a few of the organizations the Yankees work with to help build a better community:

THE YANKEE FOUNDATION-Since its formation in 1973, the Yankees have contributed to the New York Community through this philanthropic organization, founded by Yankees Principal Owner George M. Steinbrenner. The Foundation has raised over $2.5 million for athletic, recreational and educational programs for New York's young people. Some of the organizations which receive assistance from the Foundation includes the New York Urban League, Boys Club of Greater New York, Boy Scouts, Big Brothers of New York, Catholic Youth Organization, Fresh Air Fund, Instructional Television, Police Athletic League, Special Olympics, Patrolmen's Benevolent Association, the YMCA as well as other numerous university programs.

THE SILVER SHIELD FOUNDATION-Established in 1981 by George Steinbrenner, the Foundation provides college scholarships for the children of New York Police Officers, Firefighters and State Troopers killed in the line of duty. Since 1982, nearly $1.5 million has been contributed through the Yankees' donation of proceeds from the annual Silver Shield game and from New York's top business leaders and concerned citizens. There are currently 63 Silver Shield beneficiaries from 28 families. Twenty children are currently attending colleges, universities or vocational schools, while seven have graduated.

THE WHITNEY M. YOUNG, JR. FOOTBALL CLASSIC-Since 1977, the Yankees have sponsored and underwritten the Whitney M. Young, Jr. Memorial Football Classic in association with the New York Urban League. Proceeds from the game provide needed funds to help minority youth gain financial assistance in pursuit of a college education. The Yankees have raised over $650,000 since 1977.

THE YANKEES WINTER CARAVAN-Each off-season numerous Yankee players and front office executives visit New York area schools and hospitals where they meet and talk baseball with fans of all ages. The caravan is scheduled to be even bigger following the 1991 baseball season.

Current Yankee personnel also make individual efforts to help charities in the New York area. General Manager Gene Michael is the founder of the Gene Michael Fund, a chapter of the Tomorrow's Children Fund. The fund raises money for research, care and assistance for children's cancer at the Hackensack Medical Center in New Jersey.

Don Mattingly is deeply involved with the Children's Health Fund, which provides mobile medical care for New York City's homeless children. He also does work with the Westchester/Putnam Special Olympics, the Easter Seals Society and the National Committee for the Prevention of Child Abuse.

Jesse Barfield and Andy Hawkins contribute a good deal of time to the New York Chapter of Cystic Fibrosis and 65 Roses Sports Club. Again this year the Yankees, in association with Waldbaum's supermarkets and Food For Survival, will hold a food drive at Yankee Stadium June 22 and 23 to benefit the hungry of New York City. Marla Barfield and other Yankee wives will be on hand outside of the Stadium that weekend to accept food donations.

TONY KUBEK

Returning for his second year in the Madison Square Garden Network booth is Tony Kubek, one of the most respected voices in baseball. The former Yankees shortstop, who played in six World Series, previously spent 24 years with NBC Sports as analyst for the "Baseball Game of the Week" and 13 seasons as a television broadcaster for the Toronto Blue Jays. Tony's insightful coverage of the Yankees has already made a lasting impression with the team's fans.

DEWAYNE STAATS

Known as one of the best play-by-play announcers in the business, DeWayne Staats is now in his second season broadcasting Yankees games for Madison Square Garden Network. The 38-year-old Staats served as play-by-play announcer for the Chicago Cubs on WGN-TV and radio from 1985-89. He also performed the same duties for the Houston Astros for eight seasons prior to joining the Cubs.

AL TRAUTWIG

The multi-dimensional Al Trautwig will again host MSG Network's pre-game show ("Yankee Scorecard"), the post-game show as well as join Kubek and Staats during game broadcasts. Trautwig also hosts other programs on MSG Network and calls play-by-play for selected New York Knicks telecasts.

JOHN STERLING

1991 marks John Sterling's third consecutive year with the Yankees in the WABC radio booth, although he broadcasted Yankee games in the 1970s as well. During baseball's off-season Sterling does play-by-play for the NBA's Atlanta Hawks and also hosts the winter edition of the "Yankees Magazine Show" on MSG Network. Formerly a play-by-play announcer for the New York Nets, New York Islanders and Baltimore Bullets, John was also an Atlanta Braves broadcaster for five years. His knowledge and experience have endeared him to all Yankee fans.

JOE ANGEL

An 11-year veteran of broadcasting Major League Baseball games, Joe Angel begins his first year in the WABC radio booth. Angel had broadcast for the Baltimore Orioles the past three seasons and had also previously worked for the Minnesota Twins (1984-86), Oakland Athletics (1980-81) and the San Francisco Giants (1976-78). A native of Colombia, South America, Angel brings a fresh approach and insight to his broadcasts.

It takes a pretty good TV to fool these experts.

No ordinary big screen television could deceive these discerning eyes. It takes a picture that's ultra-bright, ultra-clear and ultra-sharp. ∞ Like Hitachi's Ultravision.™ It looks so true to life because it's the first TV with 800 lines of resolution. ∞ Satisfy your own curiosity.

Call 1-800-HITACHI and find out where to see Ultravision for yourself.
